

SnowPro Core Transition (COF-C02 to COF-C03)

Snowflake will be releasing a new English version of the SnowPro® Core exam (COF-C03) on February 16, 2026. Effective May 14, 2026 the English version of COF-C02 will be retired. During the transition period, both versions of the exam in English will be available to candidates to become SnowPro Core Certified.

Snowflake will also be releasing new translated versions of the SnowPro® Core exam (COF-C03) for Japanese, Korean, French, and Spanish on April 15, 2026. Effective July 31, 2026 the translated versions of COF-C02 will be retired. During the transition period, all translated versions of the exam will be available to candidates to become SnowPro Core Certified.

Please review our SnowPro Core blog for detailed information on the exam changes.

Why is Snowflake releasing a new version (COF-C03) of the SnowPro Core Certification exam?

Snowflake continues to evolve as new features and functionalities are routinely developed. These types of innovations and best practices will be reflected in the updated version.

What is different about this exam?

The content remains the same, but the exam structure has been reorganized from six domains to five domains for clarification and modernization purposes. We've also added updated content and include new features like Snowflake Notebooks, Apache Iceberg™ tables, and Snowflake Cortex. You can see the commonality between the content of the two versions by reviewing the exam guides here. Additionally, please read this blog that details the changes.
